Comments

The Primitivo is the grape variety from which we generally obtain rich and long-lasting red wines, characterized by softness and opulence. Characteristics that seem far removed from the idea of rosé wine. However, only apparently, because a lot depends on the management of the vineyard. The Primitivo is a grape with particularly pronounced notes of small berries, which in red wines become ripe fruits and jam as they ripen. A grape with these characteristics, harvested between the second and third decade of August, before the usual desiccation process of Primitivo begins, makes it possible to obtain rosé wines with particularly fruity notes and an enviable freshness.

Tasting notes

This wine impresses with a fruity aroma that is reminiscent of wild berries and sour cherries. The fresh and velvety taste makes this wine a particularly joyful experience.
