Comments

The white grape variety Arneis, which is very old and also low in acidity, was already known in the 15th century under the names Renesium and Ornesio. In Italy, it is grown exclusively in Piedmont, which is why it is also known as "Barolo bianco". It is used to produce the DOC Roero Arneis wine in the province of Cuneo and the DOC Langhe Arneis wine in the province of Alba.

Pairing

Goes perfectly with fish dishes, fine starters and an aperitif.

Tasting notes

The nose has the finest notes of peach and banana with light nuances of floral scents. Also fresh on the palate, round and long on the finish with little acidity.
