Comments

One of the last pure pot still whiskeys still being made in Ireland today, since 1939. In 1985 the last casks were filled and production ceased. A few years ago, the brand was revived by the Irish Distillers Group (IDG). Redbreast is also called The Priest of Bottle because Irish priests are said to have always had a bottle in the house

Pairing

After a meal or just to enjoy.

Tasting notes

A classic from Ireland and one of the last Pure Pot Still Whiskeys still in production. Dried fruits, bananas and apples complemented by vanilla and nut aromas, oak and sherry notes. Sweet, notes of pear, apricots and malt and a clear note of pepper. Intense and long finish.
